The Sahara Desert is the largest desert in the world. It goes across Africa from Senegal to Egypt. The Sahara Desert is an unfriendly environment. During the day it's very hot, and at night it's very cold. It is also very hard to find water in the Sahara.

In 2006, Kevin, Ray, and Charlie decided to do something very challenging. They made the decision to run across the Sahara Desert- 6,920 km. It seemed impossible to do, but they wanted to try. The three men liked to test themselves, and this would be a very big test.

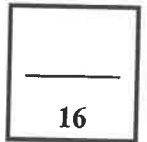

On the morning of November 2, Kevin, Ray, and Charlie started their trip across the Sahara. Every morning they began running at 5:00. At 11 a.m. they stopped and rested until 5 p.m. Then they ran again until 9:30 in the evening. Each day they ran about 64 km. Every day it was the same thing. They got up and ran. They listened to music on their iPods, and they ran and ran.

The three men had some problems on their trip, and many times they wanted to quit and go home. It was often very hot (60°C) during the day, and the heat made them sick. Their legs and feet hurt. Sometimes it was so windy that they couldn't see. One time they got lost. But they didn't quit. After 111 days, they successfully finished their trip across the Sahara Desert.
