(A) Read the following text carefully, and then answer the questions that follow:

Katherine Lucey knows from personal experience the amazing impact that light canhave on a family's well-being. Lucey helped to install a solar-light system in the home of aUgandan family who didn't have access to electricity. The system powered just three lights,but it changed the family members' lives dramatically.

One light was placed in the kitchen, one outside for security, and the final one wasplaced near the family's chickens. Light encourages chickens to lay more eggs, so soon thefamily could earn a little extra income by selling more eggs. Over time, the family savedenough money to buy a cow, a goat, and a sheep. The family's mother eventually was able tostart a school and women's literacy club.

The Ugandan family's situation was not unique. In poor countries around the world,millions of families live without electricity — 600 million people in Africa, and one in sixpeople globally. Without electric lights, these people have had to use dangerous alternatives.Often they use kerosene lamps, which are expensive and produce toxic black smoke. Thesmoke causes serious health problems, and thousands of people are seriously burned or die inkerosene accidents each year.

Until recently, there were few solutions to this problem. However, everything began tochange with the introduction of small solar lamps. Costing as little as $10, these lights arenow affordable even to poor families, and because there is no need to buy kerosene, the lampspay for themselves in a few months. Solar lights are clean and safe, and many now also havean outlet to charge a cell phone. The introduction of light to homes in this way has improvedmillions of people's lives in the past few years. It allows families to extend the working day,and children can study and do their homework after dark.

The demand for solar lighting devices is growing fast. There are now over 40companies that offer affordable and high-quality solar lights. In Africa alone, solar lightinghas benefitted over 35 million people across 25 countries. Thanks to technology innovationsand the work of many creative people, millions of people around the world can look forwardto a brighter future.

(A) From a, b, c and d, choose the correct answer: (5x10- 50 Marks)

(I) Summary Making (60 Marks)

(A) Read the following passage, then do as required:

Blue Zones are regions around the world where people tend to live much longer than the average. Despite their geographical differences, these areas share several important traits that contribute to their residents' long and healthy lives. First, the diet in Blue Zones is primarily plant-based, featuring lots of vegetables, fruits, nuts, and whole grains. Additionally, residents stay physically active through daily routines such as gardening,walking, and doing household chores. They also have strong relationships with their family members, friends and neighbours. Lastly, avoiding harmful habits plays an important role in their long lives. By incorporating these habits into our daily lives, we can improve our chances of living longer.

(B) In a paragraph of FOUR sentences ONLY, summarise and paraphrase the above text in answer to the following question:

Why do people in Blue Zone areas live longer than normal?
