Louis Braille was born in 1809 in a village in France. When he was only three years old, he had an accident while he was playing in his father's shop and became blind. His father tried to teach poor Louis how to read but he could not. Young Louis was very clever and talented. He loved music and songs. He also played the piano and the cello. At that time, blind people were trying to read and write in different ways, but it was very difficult for them. Something had to happen to enable blind people to read.

When Louis turned sixteen years old, the idea of using dots to help blind people read came to his mind. So, he invented this kind of reading and writing, called Braille, by feeling the dots with his fingers. This way was so useful that it is still used nowadays. In 1828, Louis worked as a teacher for blind people. He died in January 1852 at the age of forty-three.

Nowadays, millions of blind people use Braille to read many languages, including Arabic. We should not forget to respect and encourage people who serve humanity. A lot of encouragement is needed to help the ones who need it the most.
