It was early spring, and the weather was really nice. Jim's father told him that on Saturday they would go to the forest. Jim was excited. His mother was busy and had to stay at home to take care of his little sister, so she was not able to go with them.

The drive to the forest was only an hour, but to Jim it seemed forever. They finally arrived to the forest. Dad found a good spot close to the lake, put up the tent, set up some chairs and started a small fire. Sitting close by them was a boy about Jim's age. He came over and said his name was Barry and asked Jim if he could play with him. "Sure," said Jim. His dad began talking to Jim's dad about school, work and things dads usually talk about.

The boys explored the rabbit holes. They also enjoyed collecting some leaves for school activities. They prepared their fathers' fishing rods and they watched the forest birds which were beautiful and colourful. Finally, they decided to head for the lake. "Be careful," shouted Barry's father. "We will," Barry shouted back. The boys were having a great time. Suddenly, it became quiet and Jim couldn't find Barry. Jim looked around and finally saw him waving his hands yelling for help. Jim took action and remembered the lifesaving skills he learned during his swimming class at the local pool during the summer. Jim swam to where Barry was and put his arm around him and told him to hold on tight. Just then the forest ranger saw them. He rushed to the water and was able to bring Barry safely back out of the lake. Barry's dad was so scared, but he realised if it hadn't been for Jim's quick action, Barry may have drowned.

Barry and his dad thanked Jim for his fast thinking and great swimming skills. That night they invited Jim and his dad to have a cup of hot chocolate with them. "It's my thank you treat," said Barry's dad. Not only did the boys become friends, but their fathers did as well!
