Pizza is certainly one of the world's favourite foods. But where does pizza come from? And who made the first one? In fact, people have been making pizza for a very long time. People in the Stone Age cooked grains on hot rocks to make dough—the basic ingredient of pizza. Over time, people used the dough as a plate, covering it with various other foods, herbs, and spices. They had developed the world's first pizza. It was simple but delicious. People enjoyed experimenting with different toppings.

In the early 16th century, European explorers brought back the first tomatoes from the Americas. Tomatoes are a standard ingredient in many pizzas today. At first, however, most Europeans thought they were poisonous. For about 200 years, few people ate them. Many people were afraid to try new foods. Some even believed that tomatoes could make them sick.

Slowly, people learned that tomatoes were safe to eat, as well as tasty. In the early 19th century, cooks in Naples, Italy, started the tradition of putting tomatoes on baking dough. The flatbread soon became popular with poor people all over Naples. In 1830, cooks in Naples took another big step in pizza history—they opened the world's first pizza restaurant. This made pizza more available to everyone. As more people tried it, pizza became even more popular.

Today, up to five billion pizzas are served every year around the world. In the U.S. alone, about 350 slices are eaten every second! People may not know it, but every piece is a slice of history.
