The history of underwater diving started in ancient times. In early Greece and Rome, people used to swim or dive searching for food, collecting sponge or looking for valuable materials like pearls in the ocean. The brave divers would hold their breath and dive in the deep waters with the help of heavy stones weighing them down. They had to stay down there for minutes at a time.

Diving also became a popular sport in Sweden and Germany in the 18th and 19th centuries. Athletes should jump into water from a platform or springboard. They should have certain skills like strength, flexibility, balance, and power to win the championship.

However, diving is very dangerous. Many things can go wrong and cause death. But with good training, many of the dangers can be reduced. Drowning is the most common cause of diving deaths. Divers in the sea drown from running out of air, panic, lack of training, some health problems and equipment failure. As you know, humans breathe only air. Inhaling water can become deadly very quick. Divers should never put themselves in a position to run out of air.

To go diving safely, you need to be trained well by a diving training club. You should always dive with a friend that you are confident with. Stay calm, breathe, and have fun!
