Is Email Good for Social Relationships?

Most people think email is a helpful invention. It allows friends and family who are far apart to keep in touch with each other easily. Before email, it was more difficult to stay in touch with friends who lived far away. Long distance telephone calls were expensive. And letters took so long to send and receive that they didn't let people talk to each other. Most people agree that email has been very helpful in allowing people to remain friends with people they do not see very often. However, some people think that email is changing people's social networks. In the past, a person's friends usually lived nearby. Often your best friend was your next-door neighbor. This is because you could see and talk to this person quickly and easily. When you needed help, it was easy to walk next door. This is not the case anymore. Now, when you need help, it is just as easy to email a friend about a problem. Some people are afraid that this is harmful to local communities. People who live near each other do not know each other as well as they used to. In the U.S., there are groups who are trying to change this trend. These groups are trying to organize community events to get people together and make life in neighborhoods more like it used to be. These people don't think email is a bad thing. They just want to make sure that people interact with each other in real life, too.

Many people were surprised by these results. They thought that more people liked to go out to restaurants and parks or spend time in the mall. But an increasing number of people prefer to stay home and watch TV and films in their own living room. "Going out with friends is too expensive," one respondent said. "And it is more comfortable to be at home on your own couch, watching TV. Also there are many films available on TV now so we don't have to go out and rent a DVD from a video store".

Many restaurants and video stores offer all kind of small gifts and discounts to attract customers, but the amount of people who prefer to stay at home rather than go out continues to increase. Shop At Your Local Farmer's Market!

A farmer's market is a place where local farmers sell their produce. It is usually held outdoors and often on scheduled days of the week. Produce usually means fruits and vegetables. But at some farmers' markets, farmers also sell meats, eggs, and dairy products, such as milk, cheese, and butter. Food that is sold at farmers' markets is known for being fresh and is often organic. Buyers assume that the food has been just picked or prepared at a local farm. There are a lot of reasons to buy your food at a farmer's market rather than at a grocery store. The following are just a few of them: When you buy food from a farmer's market, you are supporting local farms. This allows the farms to stay in business, which in turn, preserves the farmland from development. Farms can usually sell their food at a much lower price than grocery stores. This is because they don't have to pay as many employees or pay for the food to travel. The food you buy will be fresher and possibly healthier than food bought at the grocery store because chemicals have not been added to it. Since the food does not have to be packed and shipped to a far-away grocery store, it does not contain any additives or preservatives to keep it fresh. Buying food at your local farmer's market also helps the environment because it means your food did not have to be shipped from far away.
