1 There was a boy who always lost his temper very quickly and hurt people's feelings. His father advised him to control himself, but he never listened to his father's advice. His father decided to challenge him by letting him hammer nails on the garden's wall every time he got angry. The boy was surprised from his father's challenge, but he couldn't say no to him. He started hammering the nails on the wall every day that he got angry and lost his temper.

2 Hammering the nails was so difficult. Day by day, the boy started controlling his temper and he didn't get angry so quickly because he found it difficult to hammer nails every day. A couple of days later, he didn't hammer any nail because he could completely control himself. Then his father said: "You had done a great job, but you have to pull those nails you hammered earlier on every day that you don't get angry on".

3 The son started taking the nails out every day he didn't get angry on it, and doing that was not easy too. After two weeks, he finished pulling those nails. He returned to his father, and he told him about what he achieved. His father took him to the wall and said: " My son, I'm so happy and grateful to see your achievement, but look at this wall and tell me what can you see in it? " The son was so surprised, but he answered his father "I can see a lot of holes on the wall". His father smiled and said: "ok, considering that the wall is people's hearts, and the nails are your words that you said to people when you get angry, so even if you say sorry to them and you take the nails away, the impact will stay forever and the wound will remain."
