VI Reading Comprehension & Summary Making (80 marks)

Read the following passage, and then answer the questions below:

In downtown Kuwait City and overlooking the blue shores of the Arabian Gulf is the National Assembly building, which was built in 1985 and is regarded today as a clear model of architectural splendor. It was designed by the renowned Danish architect Jorn Utzon 10 years before its completion, the architect who designed the Sydney Opera House, made the Kuwaiti parliament building to be one of the most inspiring buildings in the world. Utzon's original plans for designing the building went through several amendments during the time of carrying out this big project but despite these minor changes in the plan of the design the building kept its identity and similarity to the original plan of the design.

The building was seriously damaged during the Iraqi invasion of February 1991, when retreating Iraqi troops set it on fire, but it has been restored after that. Some 45,000 books and publications were also found missing from its library. The ground floor hosts the offices of HH the Amir, HH the Crown Prince and parliament secretariat employees, a ceremony chamber, a cafeteria, a library, a mosque, a resting room and several separate meeting rooms. The building has four entrances, two in each of the building's northern and southern wings, as the southern wing is the entrance of senior officials, lawmakers and esteemed guests.

Abdallah Al-Salim Hall has two floors, the first of which hosts lawmakers and cabinet members in addition to the press, while the second hosts spectators. Some 120 seats have been assigned for delegates, with 222 for the press, as spectators are given 736 seats. Due to the ever-increasing number of employees expansion plans were adopted in 2008 for a supplementary building with bridges linking it to the main structure. The new building includes a basement and five floors. It has been equipped with 100 offices, spread across the numerous building's floors, a parking lot in the basement, a library, an IT center and a theatre.
