Reading Comprehension & Summary Making

Read the following passage, then answer the questions below:

An elderly woman wakes up one morning, thinking that day is going to be great. She travels about her house as she performs her daily house chores and up-keep. All of a sudden, she feels an unbearable pain in her chest. She is having a heart attack. Aware that she is all alone in the house, she tries to reach the nearest phone but cannot get to it. She collapses on the floor, quickly losing consciousness. Not a minute later, an ambulance arrives at her house and takes her to the hospital, where the doctors are able to revive her. Because she could not reach the phone to call for help, only one thing saved her, the smart clothes she was wearing.

In the past, "smart clothes" simply described a stylish outfit. But in the 21st century, the phrase has changed completely to take a whole new meaning. Today's smart clothes are high-tech garments that do a whole lot more than just cover your body. These clothes offer a variety of cool high-tech functions. Some types of smart clothing have already hit the market. A German clothing maker has introduced what it calls the "mp3blue jacket." This garment can be used as both an MP3 player and cell phone so we can say that the "smart clothes" is a future form of clothing that functions as an active device. Scientists have worked hard to make the ordinary clothes as computers. They are trying hard to embed some kind of electronics to the clothes. Many people believe that it would be great to have clothes that just not serve the purpose of fashion only. It will go farther than that and serve people in many fields in life.

The first most important benefit of smart clothes is that they are of a great interest to the world's militaries, which often try supply their soldiers in the wars with such kinds of clothes. Military and commercial research scientists try hard to develop smart clothing that possesses many of the useful properties of computers like the ability to store and control data; display images, text, and video; connect to the Internet; offer input devices; and so on. Other possible features of smart clothing include the ability to detect chemicals in the air, record the wearer's speech and activity, and even give an image of the scene behind the soldier.
