Mansour's Holiday

I'm Mansour and last month, I travelled on the Silk Road. This is a network of routes from China to Europe. I started in China and travelled as far as Pakistan, rather than going all the way to Italy.

I saw many wonderful things - festivals with unusual sports and market days where I experienced local culture. I also visited a family's house and that was my favourite part. I had been worried about not speaking the local languages and having to cross high mountains. However, the hardest thing was finding good transport because you can't just take a bus.

I used a travel company, and this was mainly so that I could see as much as possible in the short time I had. Of course, it cost more than travelling by myself, but it was worth the extra money as I didn't miss any important cultural events.

Before I travelled, I read about the weather and I bought special shoes for climbing. In China, I had to buy some warm clothes, but there was no need for outdoor equipment.

Steel

Saif lives in one of Dubai's many tall skyscrapers. He moved back to the city a few months ago after studying business in the USA for two years. While he was there, he learned how much money can be made from trading materials such as steel. So, when his father asked Saif to help run the family business, Saif said yes.

The family business takes steel from old cars and other products and makes it hot, so that it can be used again. There is no difference in quality between old steel and new steel, and so both get the same price on the market. Both types of steel can be used to make a new bridge, for example. However, old steel is cheaper to produce. The demand for old steel is very high, and the UAE exports most of it to countries such as India, Oman and Pakistan.

Saif's family business is expanding steadily. It now employs fifty people in its factory. The employees work long hours every day to clean the old steel and get it ready to use again. Saif wants to use his business knowledge to help the UAE trade steel more efficiently as, at the moment, steel is traded through many people and this practice is slow. Saif wants to change this method and plans to make the UAE a world leader in steel.
