Film and Food

Have you always dreamt about getting paid to eat? Or to spend time online talking about your restaurant experiences? Have you thought about using film to share information about international food from some of the best restaurants in town? If so, we have the job for you! We are looking for applications for the role of food critic.

All you really need is the ability to communicate your ideas in a fun and interesting way. We'll supply the equipment, the filmmaking crew and teach you everything else while you're doing the job. Eventually, you can even work your way up to being the director, if you like.

Before you start each shoot, make sure you have a good idea for the script. It must demonstrate your love of different cuisine and be full of exciting content. Next, make sure that the rest of the team know what you are going to say. Then, all that is left to do is share your enthusiasm with the world!

We recommend that you start organising things before you get to the location. Once there, you and your crew should work together to check the lighting, the sound quality and the best places to film. Also, consider shooting more film than you need. Finally, it is a good idea to make sure that you have what you want before you leave the location.

Your job is more than going to restaurants to try the food though – we want you to talk to the waiters and the owner. You're not just reviewing the quality of the food; the audience want to know about the atmosphere, the facilities and the staff.

Like every job, it will have its challenges. Many people find it hard to manage everything to make fantastic films. You may need to work long days to get projects finished. On the other hand, you will be able to try lots of different cuisines and are sure to meet great people.

If you think you'd be good for the role – make your application today!

For each question (14 – 20), choose the correct answer according to the text:
True, False or Not given.

Social Media

There are many reasons why people use social media, some of them being that it connects people from all over the world, allows people to share cultures and helps us stay up-to-date about what is going on in the world. Nowadays, people also use it to search for job opportunities. This in particular explains the huge increase in use of social media in recent years.

However, such networking sites can have a negative impact on societies. While it can help to bring people together, it can also negatively affect relationships between friends and families. Furthermore, the most serious issue is that it can make people lazy – they may choose not to exercise or be active because they are online so much.

This is important because, in 2019, 79% of the population in the United States had a social media profile. In fact, by 2023, there will be 257 million social media users in the USA alone! Whereas, in Mexico, there will be 73 million users and in Brazil 110 million users; the numbers are increasing everywhere.

We often hear that teenagers spend too much time on social media. Unsurprisingly, it is affecting their social skills and their ability to do well in school. Sadly, this is true all over the world. Although, the most shocking thing, in my opinion, is that so much of their personal information is put online.

Of course, to stop using social media would be very difficult for many people. However, it is advisable that the time spent on it should be limited. In addition, there are ways to stay safe online. Most people know not to upload any financial information, such as their credit card details or to post information like addresses or phone numbers. But the most effective way to protect yourself is to install protection software which can keep you safe, particularly from identity theft and fraud.
